The cost of isming the $20,000,000 Treasury Notes by the government, was $20,000. None of these notes were less than $50, and yet for the engraving, registering and signing of them the expense amounted to almost as much as the President's salary! Oh economy! economy.—Mobile Adv.

The Globe says, that "lightning is most apt to strike buildings containing large quantities of metallic sobstance." If that's the case, there's very little danger of its striking the treasury of the United States.—Louisville Journal.

A Noble Fellow:—During the late fire in Yew York, a femule was discovered making her way through the flaunce into a house. The firemen detained her with much difficulty, and to her interrogations she only exclaimed, " My child! my child!" A noble hearted fireman rushed to where she pointed, and was soon seen issuing from the burning building with the infant in his arms. The scene was truly affecting, and the generous fellow who rished his own life to save that of the child, deserves the warmest thanks of every one.
